Dr Bhavna de Kock
Business Unit Manager
Union Hospital

I chose to vaccinate as soon as the opportunity arose. I chose to vaccinate for my health and for those I love. I chose to vaccinate to be able to be there for you.

Being vaccinated means:

- Being able to come home after a day of work without the guilt that I may infect my family
- Being able to hug and kiss my child
- Being healthy enough to come back to work and help you, your family, your community
- Being able to make a positive difference to healthcare

Come - make a difference with me.

Sr Kefilwe Diphoko
Nursing Service Manager
Union Hospital

I vaccinated because it was the right thing to do. Having Covid had a big impact on myself and my family. I could not spend time with my husband or play with my children.

Covid took more than a toll on my health. It took my time with those I love. It took the opportunity to help my colleagues fight this pandemic.

It affected my mental health, leaving me feeling vulnerable. It took my sense of taste and smell, the ability to enjoy the simple things in life. And I won't allow it to take anything more. I stand as a proud woman, vaccinated.

I stand as a member of your community, as your healthcare provider, urging you to do what is right - vaccinate. For yourself and those you love. For those who cannot, vaccinate and let us keep our community and workplace safe.

Ofentse Badirwang
Pharmacist Co-ordinator

I got the vaccine because I believe and trust in science. As a Pharmacist I have seen the effects of medicine and science on healthcare and the lives that it has saved.

Having been Covid positive myself, I also saw the other side. How easy it was for a virus to tear our lives apart, to force us into a society where we had to isolate ourselves from those we care about.

Covid came with a force, but we are fighting back with a vengeance. I refuse to be a statistic.

Do what's right, vaccinate!
